UNIVERSITÉ PARIS 1 PANTHÉON-SORBONNE

Historically affiliated to the Sorbonne and the Paris Faculty of Law and Economics, Paris 1 Panthéon-Sorbonne University today has an enrollment of 45,000 students in its 10 teaching and research departments and 4 institutes.

◆ MAIN PROGRAMMES OF STUDY

Arts and Humanities

This field includes the departments of history, geography, philosophy, art history and archaeology, and arts. Some of its courses are unique and exclusive in France (e.g. aesthetics and restoration of works of art). The research centres associated with these departments have an international audience, and some of the preparatory courses are among the most renowned in France.

Economics and Management

Economics, management, and mathematics and computer science form this third field. It is one of the largest French university centres of excellence, both in terms of the number of theses defended in the various disciplines offered and in terms of the numerous international partnerships established in the past few years.

Law and Political Science

This area brings together the departments of law (public law, private law, international, European and comparative law), political science, labour and social studies (economic and social administration and social law). The Sorbonne Law School gathers the university's main courses and research teams in the field of law.

◆ RESEARCH

Research at Paris 1 Panthéon-Sorbonne University follows a centuries-old tradition of excellence while constantly evolving in its subjects and methods. The university's 1,500 teachers/researchers are divided into 37 research teams, 24 of which are joint research units with the CNRS (Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique) and/or the IRD (Institut de Recherche pour le Développement). Over 320 PhD theses and Habilitations are defended every year in the university's 10 doctoral schools and more than 300 conferences and symposiums are organised each year. Founded more than 50 years ago, the Éditions de la Sorbonne form a huge asset which includes over 1,000 titles in its catalogue, with 60 books and journals published each year.

◆ STRENGTHS

Paris 1 Panthéon-Sorbonne University maintains one of France's largest library systems. The crown jewel is the Sorbonne Interuniversity Library, which contains nearly two million printed volumes.

Faithful to its international dimension and taking into account today's context, Paris 1 Panthéon-Sorbonne University has developed a dense network of partnerships with key universities in 65 countries, covering the five continents. This strong international presence makes it possible for Paris 1 Panthéon-Sorbonne to offer provision for the international joint supervision of PhDs, Erasmus Mundus programmes, joint degree programmes, and many delocalised degrees within foreign partner universities. Paris 1 Panthéon-Sorbonne University is also a founding member of the European university alliance Una Europa, along with ten other institutions. The university is ranked in a variety of world university rankings, reflecting its position as a leading global institution in research and education, especially in the field of humanities and social sciences.

Paris 1 Panthéon-Sorbonne's clear policy of engagement in public and economic life has resulted in an equally rich network of relations with public and private sector actors. The Panthéon-Sorbonne Foundation has partnered with the economic sectors in order to develop and support innovative projects in the field of higher education and research, based on four pillars: education, international, research and training, and heritage.

◆ LOCATION

Paris 1 Panthéon-Sorbonne University occupies some of Paris's greatest architectural treasures. Based for centuries on a large campus in the Latin Quarter of Paris, the university has been expanding since the 1970s by building new facilities in other parts of the capital and
